The purpose of this study was to directly compare 2 commonly used methods of measuring vertebral kyphosis: CT and MRI. This was a cross-sectional study of 2 groups of subjects: pediatric patients with idiopathic scoliosis undergoing surgical fusion (n = 35) and healthy controls (n = 8). Two reviewers independently measured and assigned a measurement error to each subject using both CT and MRI. Measurement errors were compared using paired t-tests and Bland-Altman plots. Intraobserver agreement was assessed using Cohen's kappa. MRI measurements were associated with significantly greater error than CT measurements (p return $this; } /** * @return \Magento\Review\Api\Data\RatingInterface[] */ public function getRatings() { return $this->_ratings; } /** * @param \Magento\Review\Api\Data\RatingInterface[] $ratings * @return $this
